Typical English food
The fry-up

This is a traditional English breakfast. It contains fried egg, sausages, bacon, baked beans, tomatoes, mushrooms, fried bread and sometimes black pudding.
Black pudding is a type of sausage made out of animal blood. It is very common in the North of England. In Spain it is known as MORCILLA.
Roast Dinner

A Roast Dinner is typically eaten on Sunday at lunchtime with your family. It consists of a roasted meat (beef, lamb or pork) with vegetables, potatoes and gravy. Sometimes there is a Yorkshire pudding too.
Yorkshire pudding

Yorkshire pudding is made from a batter. This is a mixture of milk, eggs and flour. This is then poured into hot oil. It is very common to eat this with meat and potatoes.
Fish and Chips

Fish and Chips are traditionally eaten by the seaside but nowadays there are takeaways in most towns. The fish is usually cod or haddock, which is then battered. Most British people like to put lots of salt and vinegar on them and eat them out of newspaper!
